General Search Engines:

Google: The most widely used search engine, known for its speed and relevance.

Bing: Microsoft's search engine, integrated into various services and Windows.

Yahoo Search: Although less popular than in its heyday, it still gets a significant number of searches.

DuckDuckGo: Known for its focus on user privacy, it doesn't track search history.

Ask.com: Previously known as Ask Jeeves, it's more of a question and answer community now.

AOL Search: A veteran in the world of the internet, though not as popular as it once was.

Ecosia: An environmentally-friendly search engine that plants trees from its revenues.

Yandex: Popular in Russia and some parts of Europe, it offers similar services to Google.

Baidu: The leading search engine in China, offering various other services similar to Google.

SEO Starts with Your Customer

Buyer personas help you understand your customer

Know:

1. Your customers' pain points
2. The solution you offer that addresses those pain points
3. The features of your solution that address those pain points

SEO ALSO STARTS WITH KNOWING YOUR AUTHORITY

- Domain Authority/Authority Score
- Backlinks
- Frame of Reference for Potential Ranking

jennifer@totoseo.com
totoseo.com

A popular website, backlink.io says this about backlinks:

“Backlinks are basically votes from other websites.
Each of these votes tells search engines:

“This content is valuable, credible and useful”.

Keyword Research

Long-tail vs. Short-tail

Competition

- how many other websites or pages are ranked for the same keyword
- High competition harder to rank well
- low competition easier to achieve a higher ranking

Search Volume

- number of times a particular keyword is searched for within a given time frame
- highly searched may equal highly competitive

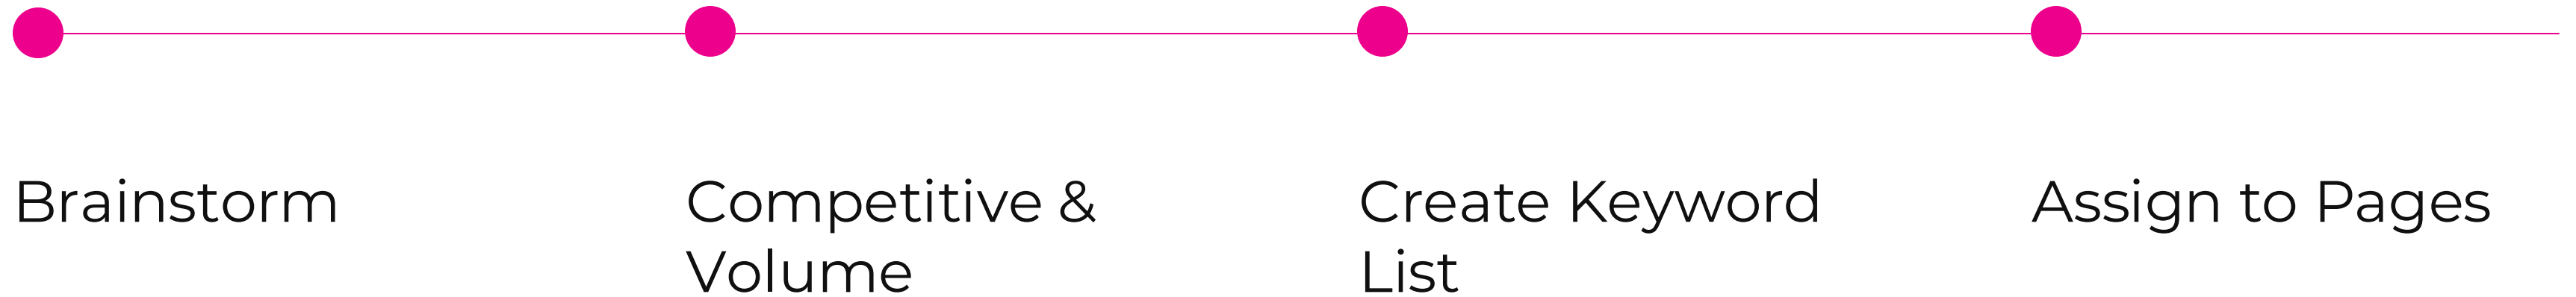

Relevance

- highly relevant to the content presented and the services or products offered.
- align well with the searcher's intent
